

The Love of a Lifetime

A little girl scraped her knee; a little boy made sure it was all better. I was a little girl full of hope, of love, of life. There was not a day that went by that a smile was not on my face. And he was the reason. The little boy next door was my best friend, the only one I told my secrets to. We grew closer and closer as the years passed.

She flipped over the bars and fell, breaking her ankle; he skipped his game just to be with her that day. He was there for all my falls and rises. There is not one memory I have that he is not in. We grew closer and closer as the years passed.

Her first date went terribly wrong; he took her out for ski ball and pizza to make her feel better. He was always there for me. He would always make sure that the outcome of any bad situation was my happiness. We grew closer and closer as the years passed.

She ran toward him tears streaming down her face, her heart broken; he stayed with her through the tissues and ice cream. He always healed my heart after it was broken. He would take time to mend the broken pieces together and send me back out into the world as one, strong body. We grew closer and closer as the years passed.

She fell in love with the boy next door, her superhero, her knight in shining armor; he fell in love with his princess and sealed it with a kiss. He made my heart swell with my love for him. As our bond grew stronger, so did our feelings for each other. We grew closer and closer as the years passed.

She cried for the first time because of him; he tore himself apart over it. The words slipped out of his mouth like thieves in the night, and stabbed my heart like a knife. I cried for a while after that, unable to comprehend how the boy who looked after me my whole life, had just broken my heart.

She felt safe in his arms; he made sure he always held her close. He stayed with me and tried to protect me in any way possible. We were inseparable, unable to leave each other's sides. We grew closer and closer as the years passed by.

Her eyes were filled with beautiful tears as she nodded her head; he was on his knee ready to spend his life with her. We knew our love was unconditional and that we were meant for each other from the start. He took a large step forward for the both of us, ready to take our lives to the next level, together. Our love grew as the years passed by.

She was covered in white, words of love flowing out of her mouth like a song; his eyes glimmered as he locked their love with a band of gold. I was going to be spending the rest of my life with this amazing man standing in front of me. And I knew I was ready. My heart melted as he expressed his love for me. Now I was his other half. Our love grew stronger as the years passed by.